

USAG-B Lean Six Sigma (LSS) Program

What is it?

LSS is the five-step business improvement program the Army adopted to eliminate waste and inefficiencies in its operations, often netting large amounts of monetary savings or cost avoidances. It is a proven process that saves Army resources.

The misconception

The misconception about LSS is that it is a long, drawn-out process requiring a substantial commitment of time and human resources. The scope of the projects determine how we go about assigning resources. If an employee has an idea and knows how to go about solving it - then we encourage him or her to just do it (JDI). It is when there is no easy answer to determine the best way ahead; the five-step process comes in to play.

Challenge

Movement In A New Direction Helps You Find
New Cheese

Current status

Today we have four trained Black Belts (BBs), and four trained Green Belts (GBs). Of these, three BBs and two GBs are certified. The Executive Quality Council (EQC) consists of ten Project Sponsors (PS); seven of which or trained.

UNCLASSIFIED

Team Baumholder - Home of Champions